William T. "Cocktail Bill" Boothby was an American bartender and writer of San Francisco, California in the years before and after the 1906 San Francisco earthquake. He tended bar for many years at San Francisco's Palace Hotel. Based on California State Legislature records, he was a resident of San Francisco in January 1895. Based on copyright registration for his 1907/1908 edition of The World's Drinks And How To Mix Them, he was a resident of or had an office in Mountain View, California in 19

Admittedly, this little book, "Cocktail Boothby's American Bartender," didn't have much to distinguish it from its East Coast competitors. But in 1891, when he published it, Boothby hadn't been tending bar all that long, his experience limited to a brief stint at the Silver Palace on Geary Street in San Francisco and stretches at a couple out-of-town resorts.

Cocktail Boothby is one of my favorite hilariously over the top characters in the history of bartending. The dude was a con artist and hustler in every sense of the words, and totally earned the affection of the entire industry. The Han Solo of bartending. While most of this is very dated, it's still a great read and a fun part of drinking history.
