The trade-off between risk and return is a key element of effective financial decision making. This includes both decisions by individuals (and financial institutions) to invest in financial assets, such as common stocks, bonds, and other securities, and decisions by a firm's managers to invest in physical assets, such as new plants and equipment.

Financial Management – Wisdom Jobs

For financial planning purposes, management is willing to assume that the net fixed asset figure on the balance sheet will increase proportionately as sales increase. The company now maintains good relations with its suppliers. As the company purchases more inventory, its accounts payable balance will increase proportionately as sales increase.
