the lower fixed interest rate paid by a bond resulting in a decline in the price of the bond. According to Mishkin and Eakins (2009), another way to explain why the bond price falls when the interest rises is that a higher interest rate implies that the future coupon payments and final payment are worth less when discounted back to the present; hence the price of the bond must be lower (p.49).
